Expertise Overview

Tristan graduated from the University of Oregon School of Law in 2025, where he served as the Executive Operations Editor for the Journal of Environmental Law & Litigation. Concentrating his degree in green business and environmental law, Tristan was a Research Fellow for the Environmental & Natural Resources Law Center on the Energy Law & Policy Project. His forthcoming paper on flood risk management, set to be published in May 2026, tackles the issues surrounding port infrastructure and the lack of federal funding for critical projects around our most economically vital ports in the United States.

Before joining Smith Freed Eberhard, Tristan clerked for the King County Prosecuting Attorney's Office in Seattle where he filed motions to vacate felony drug convictions found unconstitutional under State of Washington v. Blake. In law school, Tristan interned for Judge Andrew Hallman in the United States District Court for the District of Oregon.

Personal Life

Tristan grew up in Southern California where he attended Long Beach State University. An avid photographer, Tristan loves to travel and be outdoors. Outside of work, he can be found golfing, hiking, and enjoying the vast beauty of the Pacific Northwest.
